The region's landscape has been shaped by glaciers, rivers, and mountains, creating a mosaic of habitats that support a wide variety of plant and animal life. The forests of New England are home to majestic trees such as sugar maples, white pines, and red oaks. The region's wetlands provide critical habitat for migratory birds and other wildlife. And the coastline is a haven for marine life, including whales, seals, and dolphins.

New England's landscape is also a testament to the region's rich human history. Forests have been cleared for farmland and development, rivers have been dammed for power and irrigation, and mountains have been mined for their resources.
