

The Killer's Wrath

Introduction

Pasquale De Marco, a renowned expert in the field of criminal psychology, takes you on a chilling journey into the minds of serial killers. Over the last two decades, Pasquale De Marco has interviewed dozens of convicted murderers, gaining insights into their motivations, methods, and psyche. In this book, Pasquale De Marco shares his findings, providing a comprehensive overview of the world of serial murder.

This book is not for the faint of heart. It is a disturbing but fascinating look into the minds of some of the most depraved criminals in history. But it is also a necessary read for anyone who wants to understand the nature of evil and how to prevent it.

In this book, you will learn about:

- The different types of serial killers
- The motivations behind their crimes
- The methods they use to kill
- The impact of their crimes on victims and their families
- The challenges of investigating and prosecuting serial killers

You will also learn about some of the most notorious serial killers in history, including Ted Bundy, John Wayne Gacy, and Jeffrey Dahmer. Pasquale De Marco provides a detailed account of their crimes, their trials, and their eventual executions.

But this book is not just about the past. It is also about the present and the future. Pasquale De Marco examines the current state of serial murder in the United States and offers insights into how we can prevent future tragedies.

This book is a must-read for anyone who is interested in true crime, criminal psychology, or the nature of evil. It is a disturbing but important read that will leave you with a new understanding of the human capacity for violence.

Chapter 1: The Killer's Motive

1. The psychology of a killer

The psychology of a killer is a complex and fascinating subject. What drives someone to commit such heinous acts of violence? What are the psychological factors that contribute to the development of a killer?

There is no single answer to these questions, as the psychology of a killer can vary greatly from one individual to another. However, there are some common traits that are often found in killers, such as:

- A lack of empathy: Killers often have a lack of empathy for their victims. They may not be able to understand or care about the pain and suffering that they cause others.
- A need for control: Killers often have a need for control over their victims. They may feel powerless in other areas of their lives, and killing gives them a sense of power and control.

- A desire for attention: Killers often crave attention, and they may kill in order to get it. They may want to be noticed by the media or by law enforcement, or they may simply want to feel important.
- A history of trauma: Many killers have a history of trauma, such as childhood abuse or neglect. This trauma can lead to feelings of anger, resentment, and a desire for revenge.

It is important to remember that not all people who have these traits will become killers. However, these traits can increase the risk of someone becoming a killer, especially if they are combined with other factors, such as:

- A lack of opportunity: Killers often have a lack of opportunity to achieve their goals in life. They may be unemployed, uneducated, or living in poverty. This can lead to feelings of frustration and hopelessness, which can increase the risk of violence.

- A lack of support: Killers often lack support from family and friends. They may feel isolated and alone, which can make it easier for them to justify their actions.

If you know someone who has these traits, it is important to get them help. They may be at risk of becoming a killer, and they need to get help before it is too late.

2. The different types of killers

There are many different types of killers, each with their own unique motivations and methods. Some of the most common types of killers include:

- Mass murderers kill four or more people in a single event. They are often motivated by a desire for revenge, power, or attention.
- Serial killers kill three or more people over a period of time, with a cooling-off period between each murder. They are often motivated by a need for control, power, or sexual gratification.
- Spree killers kill two or more people in a short period of time, often in a public place. They are often motivated by a desire for revenge, anger, or attention.

- Contract killers are paid to kill someone. They are often motivated by greed or a desire for revenge.
- Thrill killers kill for the sheer pleasure of it. They are often motivated by a need for excitement or a desire to feel powerful.

Each type of killer has its own unique characteristics and motivations. However, all killers share one thing in common: they have a disregard for human life.

3. The motivations behind murder

There are many different motivations behind murder, and they can be broadly categorized into two groups: instrumental and expressive.

Instrumental murders are committed in order to achieve a specific goal, such as financial gain, revenge, or self-preservation. For example, a person may murder someone in order to steal their money or property, or to silence them because they know too much.

Expressive murders, on the other hand, are committed for the sake of the act itself. They are often driven by intense emotions, such as anger, hatred, or jealousy. For example, a person may murder someone because they are angry with them, or because they are jealous of their relationship with someone else.

Some of the most common motivations for murder include:

- Financial gain: Murder for financial gain is one of the most common types of instrumental murder. People may murder someone in order to steal their money, property, or other valuables.
- Revenge: Murder for revenge is another common type of instrumental murder. People may murder someone in order to get back at them for something they have done, or to avenge the death of a loved one.
- Self-preservation: Murder for self-preservation is a type of instrumental murder that is committed in order to protect oneself from harm. For example, a person may murder someone if they believe that person is trying to kill them.
- Anger: Murder driven by anger is a type of expressive murder. People may murder someone in a fit of rage, or because they are angry with them for something they have done.

- Hatred: Murder driven by hatred is another type of expressive murder. People may murder someone because they hate them, or because they believe that person deserves to die.
- Jealousy: Murder driven by jealousy is a type of expressive murder. People may murder someone because they are jealous of their relationship with someone else, or because they believe that person is taking something away from them.

These are just a few of the many motivations behind murder. It is important to remember that every murder is unique, and that there is no single explanation for why someone commits this heinous crime.
