Different divisions in Little League Baseball

Little League Baseball is a youth baseball organization that offers a variety of divisions for players of all ages and skill levels. The different divisions are designed to provide a safe and enjoyable playing experience for all participants.

The youngest division in Little League Baseball is the Tee Ball division, which is for players ages 4-6. In Tee Ball, players use a tee to hit the ball instead of a pitcher. This division is designed to introduce players to the basics of baseball in a fun and non-competitive environment.

The next division is the Coach Pitch division, which is for players ages 7-8. In Coach Pitch, players hit the ball off of a pitch from a coach. This division is designed to help players develop their hitting and fielding skills.

The Minor League division is for players ages 9-10. In Minor League, players pitch to each other and play on a field with 60-foot base paths. This division is designed to help players develop their pitching, fielding, and baserunning skills.

The Major League division is for players ages 11-12. In Major League, players pitch to each other and play on a field with 70-foot base paths. This division is the highest level of Little League Baseball and is designed to help players develop their skills and prepare for high school baseball.

Little League Baseball also offers a Challenger division for players with physical and mental challenges. The Challenger division is designed to provide a safe and enjoyable playing experience for all players, regardless of their abilities.

No matter what your child's age or skill level, there is a Little League Baseball division that is right for them. Little League Baseball is a great way for kids to learn teamwork, sportsmanship, and the fundamentals of baseball.
