Chapter 10: The Boy, the Girl, and the Horse Go Home

The Boy, the Girl, and the Horse Say Goodbye to Their New Friends

After many adventures and memories made, it was time for the boy, the girl, and the horse to say goodbye to their new friends. They had met so many interesting people and animals along the way, and it was hard to leave them behind.

The boy shook hands with the old man who had taught him so much about the world. The girl hugged the young woman who had become like a sister to her. And the horse nuzzled the foal who had been his constant companion.

They all exchanged promises to stay in touch, and then it was time to go. The boy, the girl, and the horse turned and walked away, waving goodbye.

As they walked, they talked about all the good times they had shared with their new friends. They laughed and cried, and they promised to never forget them.

Finally, they reached the edge of the forest. They took one last look back at their new friends, and then they turned and walked into the sunset.

They knew that they would never forget their time spent with their new friends. And they knew that they would always be in their hearts.
