Chapter 1: Roots and Redemption

The harsh realities of an unfamiliar land

Leaving the familiar shores of Jamaica for the bustling streets of New York City, Pasquale De Marco embarked on a new chapter in her life filled with both promise and uncertainty. The transition was not without its challenges. As a young woman of color in a foreign land, she faced discrimination and prejudice on a daily basis.

The vibrant community and extended family she had known back home were replaced by a sense of isolation and loneliness. The fast-paced, impersonal nature of city life was a stark contrast to the warmth and familiarity of her Jamaican village.

Financial struggles added to the burden of her new life. Despite working long hours at a low-paying job, she barely made ends meet. The cost of living in New York

City was exorbitant, and she often had to choose between paying rent and buying groceries.

The language barrier also proved to be a significant obstacle. While Pasquale De Marco had learned English in school, she found herself struggling to communicate effectively in the colloquialisms and slang of her new surroundings. This made it difficult for her to make friends and build a support system.

The harsh realities of her new life tested Pasquale De Marco's resilience and determination. She longed for the familiar rhythms of her Jamaican homeland and the comforting presence of her loved ones. Yet, amidst the challenges, she refused to give up on her dreams.
